

THE FALL RADIO PLAY SERIES CONTINUES:

It's a tough life inside the squared circle, as a pair of brothers find out in this Limelight original, inspired by classic film noir boxing pictures. Set against the backdrop of WWII-era Chicago, a family of South Side Irish will be tested by the blows urban life dishes out.

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

Invasion of the Body Snatchers has had a long life - first as a serialized set of stories in a science fiction magazine, then published as a novel. The story has been adapted for the cinema officially four times, and unofficially many other times. There are many reasons for this longevity, but none more so than this one: the continued adaptability of its central metaphor. Each time the story is told, it takes on cultural resonance; Invasion of the Body Snatchers is always a sign of the times.

On behalf of both of us, we want to thank the cast and audience for continuing to support our work, which is often challenging, complicated, and most of all, strange. Perhaps, we hope, you will find something familiar in the alien, as we so often try to ourselves.

In this original show, a family of alien visitors from the far reaches of space crash lands on Planet Earth, disguising themselves as a human family. Deciding to make the best of their situation, the aliens turn their trip to Earth into a family holiday while trying to repair their ship. In their time at Happy World, a popular amusement park, the aliens learn a bit about Earthlings, and even more about themselves.
